verbs; plural subjects need plural verbs. My brother is a nutritionist. My sisters are mathematical. See the section on Plurals for further help with subject-verb agreement. Indefinite pronounce anyone, everyone, someone, nobody, nobody is always singular and therefore require singular verbs. Everyone did his homework. Someone left the bag. Some pronouns indefinitely — like all, some — are singular or plural depending on what they refer to. (Is this related to countable or not?) Be careful to choose a verb to accompany such pronouns. Some beads have disappeared. Some of the water disappeared. On the other hand, there is an indefinite pronoun, no one, which can be singular or plural; often does not matter if you use a singular or plural verb — unless something different in the sentence determines its number. ( Writers generally do notto anyone as meaning and choose a plural verb, as in "none of the engines is working", but when something else makes us consider anyone as meaning not one, we us a singular verb, as in "none of the food is fresh") none of you say the responsibility of this accident? Is none of you affirm the responsibility of this accident? None of the students did his homework. (In this last example, the word that precluded the use of the singular verb. Some undefined pronouns are particularly annoying at all and all (listed above, also) certainly feel more than one person and, therefore, students are sometimes tempted To use a plural verb with them. They are always unique, though. Everyone is often followed by a prepositional sentence that ends in a plural word (each of the cars), thus confusing the choice of the verb. Every, it is always unique. And it requires a singular verb. Everyone has finished his homework. Always say: "Everyone is here." That means that the word is singular and nothing will change. Each of the students is responsible for his work in the library. Don "The word "Students" confuse you; the subject is each and everyone is always singular - each is responsible. The phrases like together with, as well as, and together with the same and. The phrase introduced by as or Together with will change the Previous word (mayor in this case), but not composed of the subjects (like the word and would do). The mayor as well as the brothers is going to prison. The mayor and the brothers of him are going to prison. The pronouns nor and even singular and require singular verbs even if they seem reported, in a sense, two things. None of the two traffic lights works. What shirt do you want for Christmas? Or that's fine with me. In informal writing, nor even and sometimes they take a plural verb when these pronouns are followed by a prepositional phrase that begins with. This is especially true for interrogative buildings: "Have one of the two clowns read the task?" "Do any of you take this seriously?" Burchfield calls this "a battle between notional and effective agreement". * The conjunction or no joint (as and does): when or or is used the subject closer to the verb determines the verb number. If the subject comes before or after the verb doesn't matter; The proximity determines the number. Or my father or my brother will sell the house. Nor my brothers nor my father will sell the house. Are my brothers or my father responsible? Is my father or my brothers responsible? Because a phrase like "nor my brothers nor my father will sell the house" seems peculiar, it is probably a good idea to put the plural subject closer to the verb every time it is possible. The words there and here are never subject. There are two apples. With these buildings (called explicitive constructions), the subject follows the verb but still determines the number of the verb. Verbs in. stretched for singular subjects in the third person (he, she, he and everything that those words can represent) have a s-finish. Other verbs do not add s-endings. He loves and she loves and they love and . . . . Sometimes modifiers will be between a subject and its verb, but these modifiers should not confuse the agreement between the subject and its verb. The mayor, convicted along with his four brothers for four different crimes, but who also seems, like a cat, to have different political lives, is about to end up in jail. Sometimes nouns take strange forms and can fool us into thinking that they are plural when they are really singular and vice versa. See the section on plural forms of nouns and the section on collective nouns for more information. Words such as glasses, trousers, pliers and scissors are considered plural (and require plural verbs) unless they are preceded by the pair of sentences (in which case the pair of words becomes the object). My glasses were on the bed.My pants were torn.A pair of checked trousers is in the closet. Some words end with -s and look plural but are truly singular and require singular verbs. The news from the front is bad.Measles is a dangerous disease for pregnant women. On the other hand, some words ending with -s refer to only one thing but are still plural and require a plural verb. My assets have been wiped out by depression.The average income of the workers has increased dramatically.Our thanks go to the workers who supported the union. The names of the sports teams that do not end with the "s" will take a plural verb: the Miami Heat have looked for a, the Connecticut Sun hope for new talentsâ. See the section on plural for help with this problem. Fractional expressions such as half of, a part of, a percentage of, a majority of are sometimes singular and sometimes plural, depending on the meaning. (The same applies, of course, when everyone, any, most and some act as subjects.) Sum and products of mathematical processes are expressed as singular and require singular verbs. The expression "more than one" (strangely) takes a singular verb: "More than one student has tried this". Some voters are still angry. A large percentage of older people vote against. Two-fifths of the troops were lost in the battle. Two-fifths of the vineyard was destroyed by fire. 40% of students are in favour of changing the policy. 40% of the student body is in favour of changing the policy. Two plus two is four. Four times four divided by two is eight. If your sentence combines a positive and a negative subject and one is plural, the other singular, the verb should agree with the positive subject. The members of the department, but not the president, have not to teach on Valentine's Day. It is not the members of the faculty, but the president who decides the matter. It was the speaker, not his ideas, that provoked the student revolt. Didn't you find what you need? Search our website or contact us contact us Have you ever gotten "subject/verb contract" as an error in a newspaper? this presentation will help you understand this common problem of grammar. this handout gives you several guidelines to help your subjects and verbs agree. 1. when the subject of a sentence is composed of two or more nouns or pronouns connected by and, use a plural verb. She and her friends are at the fair. 2. when two or more nouns or singular pronouns are connected or not, use a singular verb. the book or the pen is in the drawer. 3. when a compound subject contains both a singular noun and a plural noun or a pronoun united by or or, the verb should agree with the part of the subject which is closer to the verb. The boy or his friends run away every day. his friends or the boy runs every day. 4. is not a contraction of not and should only be used with a singular subject. is not a contraction of not and should only be used with a plural subject. the exception to this rule appears in the case of the first person and second person pronounces i and you. with these pronouns, contraction should not be oata. He doesn't like it. He doesn't like it. 5. do not be deceived by a phrase that comes between the subject and the verb. the verb agrees with the subject, not with a noun or a pronoun in the sentence. one of the boxes is open the people who listen to that music are few. the captain of the team, as well as his players, is anxious. the book, including all chapters of the first section, is boring. The woman with all dogs walks along my way. 6. the words each, each, neither everyone, anyone, anyone, nobody, anyone, someone, and nobody are singular and require a singular verb. each of these hot dogs is juicy. Everyone knows Mr. Jones or it's correct. 7. names such as civilians, maths, dollars, measles and news require singular verbs. The news is at 6:00. Note: the word dollars is a special case. when talking about a quantity of money, it requires a singular verb, but when referring to the dollars themselves, a plural verb is required. Five dollars is a lot of money. dollars are often oats instead of rubles in Russian. 8. names such as scissors, tweezers, trousers and shears require plural verbs. (there are two parts to these things.) these scissors are boring. Those pants are made of wool. 9. in the phrases that start with there is or "there are," the subject follows the verb. because "there is no" is not the subject, the verb agrees with the following. There are many questions. There's a question. 10. Collective nouns are words that involve more than one person but which are considered singular and take a singular verb, such as group, team, committee, class and family. the team runs during the practice. the committee decides how to proceed. The family has a long history. my family has never been able to beThe crew is preparing to dock the ship. This phrase refers to the individual efforts of each crew member. the gregg reference manual provides excellent excellentsubject-verb agreement (Section 10: 1001). 11.

Expressions such as with, together with, included, accompanied, over, or even do not change the subject number. If the subject is singular, the verb is too much. The President, accompanied by his wife, is on a trip to India. All the books, including yours, are in that box.
