To use HookSounds' music for free: You can't monetize your content. YouTube Audio Library If you want to add music to a YouTube video, the YouTube Audio Library is a great way to do it. If you're using a license other than that, it's a good idea to carefully check the requirements. Choose a feel (like "aggressive," "grooving," or "mysterious"), tempo, genre, length, or any combination of the two: Select a piece of music to get a short preview, and then download with a click. With Creative Cloud Express, adding music is easy. In general, if you are earning money from your content, then you will need a paid license. You can use this however you'd like, but you need to provide an attribution link to the original artist.CC-BY-SA: ShareAlike. 9. A good music choice can enhance a moment, elevating whatever feelings a specific scene communicates to a whole new level. Cctrax is also the only site here that features music videos. Launched in 2008, SoundCloud was built to bring musicians together and connect them with listeners and creators around the world. The site also gives you the full attribution so you can copy and paste it wherever it's needed. If you're not totally sure whether you can use a particular piece of music for your video, get in touch with the artist and let them know what you're thinking of doing. Incompetech Though it lacks the tens of thousands of songs present on FMA and ccMixer, Incompetech makes it easy to find what you're looking for and provide attribution. Wikipedia has a useful list that includes the seven most commonly used CC licenses and other less common options. The credits must include the website's link. Suggested Reads: 3 Really Easy Ways to Add Music to Any Video 9 Places to Find Royalty-Free Background Music for Your Videos Let's go! 1. Just remember to double-check the type of Creative Commons license available and the type of attribution the artist is asking for in exchange for their music. Unfortunately, you can't sort the tracks by the type of CC license they have. Your best bet for safely using music in your videos is to only use CC0 or CC-BY licenses. Log in to your account or create a new account.Search for the type of music you need for your online video, for example, hip-hop, EDM, or ambient.From the left menu, select 'Tracks'.Under 'Filter Results', find and click the © Copyright Symbol.Here you can choose the different licenses including 'To modify commercially' and 'To use commercially'.Select 'To use commercially' Now you'll see all the music tracks available for free download and commercial use. This isn't an exhaustive list, but it should be enough to get you started! Before we jump into the list, though, let's talk about free music licensing. Most of the music offered on this site is available under Creative Commons licenses of varying types, but some use an FMA license that only allows personal downloading and listening. Despite being a niche genre, there are over 600 music tracks available. To see the type of license a track has, click the down arrow on the right side of the screen; you'll see play counts and symbols that correspond to different types of Creative Commons licenses: Because Jamendo is largely focused on listening, you can find listening-friendly features like radio stations, playlists, and communities. To give you an idea of just how many songs are available, I looked at electropunk, a relatively obscure genre compared to most of the others on the site. These Creative Commons music sites will help you find royalty-free music for videos, but you still need to make sure that you're following the correct attribution procedures and not using non-commercial tracks for commercial purposes. It's not worth waiting and dealing with the inconvenience later after you've used the track as background music for your video. SoundCloud SoundCloud has one of the largest music libraries available online. Take advantage of the Creative Cloud Express expertly curated video themes as you begin building your video. In general, it's better to err on the side of caution. Music is available under an attribution license, so you're free to use it for whatever you want as long as you give credit to the artist. But it's important to understand your rights when you download a piece of music so you don't find yourself in legal trouble. Start by clicking the Get Started button and upload either your audio or your video by clicking Upload, pasting a link to content on the web, or just dragging a file straight to the Timeline. Click play to preview a track, and hit the download button to save a copy of it. As long as you do that, you're set to download and use all the music you want! The site specializes in electronic music (though it does also offer a bit of rock, jazz, and modern classical). One of the biggest benefits of using Cctrax to download music for videos is that you can filter their tracks by the type of Creative Commons license. And it's a good habit to double-check that agreement to make sure that you can use that music for video editing. This can be a good way to discover music if you're not sure what you want to use in your video editing. (Though you'll notice that there's no filtering system for videos; you'll just have to watch a bunch of them to find what you're looking for.) 7. You can import directly from YouTube or upload from a computer or phone. When in doubt, get in touch with the artist. Head over to SoundCloud. Therefore, if you are posting a video on your YouTube channel, you can't place ads or sponsored content. HookSounds Even though HookSounds has subscriptions and licenses for all kinds of content, they also offer a Use & Mention license for non-commercial use, which is for free. We've collected nine of the best sources of royalty-free music for video editing here. Many include CC-BY licenses, but there are a few CC0 and non-commercial options as well. They'll tell you if it's alright or if you'll need written permission. Reminder: Check Each Track's License I've brought this up a few times now, but it's worth reiterating: every track has a licensing agreement. Each sound has an image associated with it, displayed on the category page, that tells you the type of license it has. You will have to meet the three criteria, otherwise, you will risk getting copyright notices or your video being demonetized. Everything in the listening section has a Creative Commons license, so you can use these tracks for your videos. But there are many types of Creative Commons licenses, each with specific requirements. dig.ccMixer If you're interested in trying your hand at creating your own mixes, ccMixer is a great place to start. And there are lots of places you can find free background music for videos online—you just need to know where to look. You can also download these tracks to use in other videos as well, though you may want to double-check the licensing agreement on your chose song if you do this. Add music wherever and whenever, with the capability to adjust audio levels as you go. Musicians upload tracks, and vocalists upload acapellas. Add music to your video now Music has transformative effects, especially when it comes to storytelling. On the other side of the spectrum, ambient electronic includes almost 7,000. Free Music Archive The FMA works with artists, curators, radio stations, and Creative Commons enthusiasts to offer a huge selection of free stock music. There are around 1000 tracks that you can use for free at HookSounds. Themes come loaded with fonts, transitions, and color schemes, so choose the one that suits the music of your video the best and watch as it ties your clips together into a compelling video. In most cases, if you violate the license agreement, you'll just get an email asking you to take it down. So if you're looking for music for a particular video and you come across something you like, but isn't a good fit for your current project, you can save it. Your best bet is to use the tag search, which opens up a list of tags that you can narrow tracks with. There are other Creative Commons licenses as well. You can also filter by genre, tag, label, and artist to get the exact type of music you're looking for. 3. FreeSound While the interface isn't as modern or intuitive as other options, you can find a lot of music on FreeSound. But there's always the possibility of legal action, and that's something you don't want to deal with. Most of the music you'll find on the sites listed here are offered under a Creative Commons license, which means you can download and share them freely. From there, upload it to your YouTube video or use a video editor to add the track to your video. It's not a big deal. Just head to the Audio Library in your YouTube Studio and use the filters to find tracks by genre, mood, instrument, duration, or licensing agreement (you can choose songs and music tracks that require attribution or not). You can download, use, remix, share, and do anything else you want with this track, and you don't have to credit the artist.CC-BY: Attribution. Incompetech's filtering tool lets you select a number of criteria to narrow your selection. Not all of the videos are CC licensed, but many of them are, so if you're looking for stock video or want to feature a music video this is a good place to start. Add music to your video now Adding music to your video makes for a more engaging media experience. The track can't be used in anything that's intended for monetary gain, including monetized YouTube videos, without written permission from the artist.CC-BY-ND: NonDerivative. One of the nice features of YouTube's Music Library is that you can star your favorite tracks and come back to them later. Here's how you use SoundCloud to find royalty-free background music for your videos. 6. The site's tag list is the best way to navigate: You can also use the search bar if you have an idea of what you're looking for. With that out of the way, let's take a look at the nine best places to find high-quality royalty-free background music for videos. Each genre has numerous subgenres listed to help you find what you're looking for. When your audio and video are in the Timeline, trim them, move them, and right-click on the video to detach and remove its original background audio, if you want.Using the Studio, you can add as many audio and video layers as you want! You can use sound effects, voiceovers, music layers, TikTok songs, and visual effects like text, subtitles, lyrics, filters, fancam effects, and much more.Kapwing enables creators to trim their audio (to focus on the chorus or one soundbite, for example) and specify when in a video the music should start playing. If you do have an idea of what you're looking for, you can use the genre listings to browse available tracks or the search bar to narrow down the list. Select.Upload content from your device and arrange the video clips in your timeline.Add.Browse through a library of preloaded soundtracks or upload your own audio file.Download.Instantly download your video to share with your friends, family, and audiences. But you can find other things too, like sound effects, noise, people talking, and natural sounds. Jamendo There are two different parts of Jamendo's website: a listening section and a licensing section. It was founded by the non-commercial radio station WFMU, and is one of the driving forces behind free music on the internet. It is a good option if you are looking for original music, but unfortunately, not everyone can use it. And if you're interested in music editing, there are tons of instrument samples that you can piece together to create your own track. Here are five that you'll see often: CC0: Completely free. So be sure to take a close look at any song you're interested in. With CC-BY, you'll need to credit the artist. You can't put this track in a video without written permission from the artist. With this license, you need to make anything that uses the piece of music available under the same license.CC-BY-NC: NonCommercial. 2. The good news is that they constantly update their library, so that number is for sure increasing. 4. dig.ccMixer is a subdomain focused entirely on music, so it's a great place to check out music for videos. So you'll have to explore each one. We recommend you keep a close eye on the terms regarding the Use & Mention license to avoid getting any problems once you have published your video or podcast. Another thing to keep in mind is the tracks that fall under the Use & Mention license are the ones not tagged as Premium. Licensing Music for Video Editing - How it Works The world of music licensing is a complex one, and it's difficult to navigate. Just remember to check the type of Creative Commons license available before you download! 8. And many of the music tracks available on SoundCloud can be cleared and used for commercial purposes. FMA lists sixteen different main genres, from spoken and instrumental to hip-hop, rock and blues. Although the interface is a bit dated, you can find a lot of good music for video editing if you're willing to spend some time looking for it. Otherwise, if it is for a personal video project, for example, you are eligible for the free Use & Mention license. The content has to be for personal use only, therefore if you are a freelancer or a business you won't be able to use it. There's even a "music for video" tag! If you're interested in using music for non-Creative-Commons uses, you can check out TuneTrack, a related site that offers royalty-free music without attribution for a fee. You can find thousands of tracks here, but it can be hard to navigate at first. No matter what kind of sound you need, there's a good chance you can find it here. Cctrax If you're looking for electronica, head to Cctrax. You're free to mix them how you choose (or use them individually). 5. If you are a student or an Instagrammer posting videos like reels or IGTV that aren't sponsored, then you are all set for this license.You must give attribution to HookSounds by crediting them on the description of your video or tagging them on social media. There are certain criteria you need to meet to avoid any copyright infringements, and here is where it gets more complicated. Upload video clips and string them together into a story on your timeline. Everything on the site is available under a CC-BY license, so you'll just need to provide a link back to Incompetech when you use it.
