The apps were fun add-ons to get the most out of Today they are vital to our daily communication, work and game. Unfortunately, it looks like every week, there is another list of bad applications that causes headaches or put your security at risk. Phony Phony and financial applications are latest scammers. Touch or click for red flags that the application you are about to trust your money with is a shame. While we are talking about smartphone security, there are five changes every iPhone user should do. Tap or click for steps to see which apps are spying, hide location and close access to camera roller. Now is the time to open your app list and start clearing the rogue honest. 1. Game and puzzle app Most people don't put much thought into downloading puzzles and free game applications. But, unfortunately, this can go back to biting you in a great way when malware and other dangerous codes hide. Malware spread apps want to reach as many people as possible, so it is not uncommon to see ads for them through social media. This includes games called Rugby Pass, Flying Skateboard and Plant Monster. Tap or click for a full list of 21 bad game apps that you need to remove from your device. It's not just malware. Most games collect much more information than you can achieve. For example, take super popular words with friends. This game collects the following data: purchases, contact information, user content, identifiers, diagnostics, location, contacts, browsing history, use and "other data." I'll stick with the real life Scrabble. 2. CamScanner on iPhone or Android With precise cut-out and automatic light changes, this scanner application quickly shot popularity. CamScanner also has an ID scan model, so employees who compile new rental documents can quickly scan and load sensitive documents. Now, just take a minute before trusting this free app with your license, financial documents and social security number. ► Microsoft 11: What you need to know and when you can download ► Buy moments as NFT collector's items: Beeple, the artist behind $69M NFT auctions, presents new website Back in 2019, cybersecurity researchers found malicious code in the Android version of the PDF creator app. The bad code came from a third party advertisement the app has been updated, removing the offensive software development kit, and then returned to the google play store. However, you can choose to stay away because you do not need it. What can you hate instead? for iPhone users, the installed note application does everything you need when it comes to scanning. tap or click for pro tips to get the most out of it. for android, try the google drive app. press the icon more in the corner, then tap scan. Easy! 3. sketchy astrology app astrology allows you to look at the stars to see why you are. Well, maybe. but download astro guru: astrology, horoscope & palmistry, and you are inside for a lot of data sharing. checkpoint the search says that the app, which has over 10 million downloads, has not properly blocked user data, including usernames, birth dates, gender, location, email addresses and payment details. Damn. better get rid of it. digital cleaning: delete old accounts that you do not want, delete your photo gallery and clean your browser settings. Touch or click for simple steps to get all of this and more done. 4 find another way to fax here is another discovery of the research check point company. ifax is a popular app that allows you to send, you guessed, fax directly from your phone. researchers found exposed cloud access keys that allowed access to fax documents. Consequently, malicious actors could get access to documents sent by users 500,000-plus of the app. It could be a very bad thing if you are sending, say, signed financial documents that include sensitive information. Are you looking for an alternative? Zero fax is free if you send no more than five faxes per day and only three pages at a time. There is a fax message on the cover page, but it doesn't matter much. to send up to 25 pages per day, is $1.99 per page. If you need to receive a fax,ifax gives you a virtual fax number to receive up to 10 fax pages per month for free. there are options for payment, of course, if you go beyond free free! free is after your personal information. Tap or click for 15 technological updates that you can get for free. 5 Say no to this Check Point Research logo creator found another app with an open and real-time database: Logo Maker - Free Graphic Design & Logo Templates. The free app has a ton of downloads and great reviews. You'd never know he could expose your information to anyone who wants to find it. This includes email addresses, passwords, username and user ID. Take this as a great reminder to set unique logins for all your accounts, even applications that you cannot access much. Imagine downloading Logo Maker and set the same password you use for your banking website. Once a criminal gets his hands on the password, it is easy to check other accounts using the same credentials. Looking for photo editing software without Photoshop prices? Browse a list of free alternatives for each skill level. 6 An uninsured screen recorder Register the screen may be more useful than a static screenshot, but be careful about how you get the job done. Screen Recorder, which has over 10 million downloads, exposes the recordings made by users. Check Point says the app stores screen recordings on a cloud service. This is convenient, but researchers say, "there may be serious implications if developers incorporate secret keys and access to the same service that stores those recordings. "Of course, the Check Point research team recovered the keys that opened access to each stored recording. Of course, you do not need a separate app for this. The functionality is integrated into the phone. Tap or click for steps to record the iPhone screen. Tap or click to register on your Android. 7 Data-hungry how valuable your data is for Big Tech companies. Why else would they give you access to so many free services? Facebook is a first example. Here's just a bit of what the app traces: Contacts, call logs and text messages Your location Your internal storage Your camera and microphone Facebook-wide access to the device. He wants to track where you go (online and in person), what you look for, and what you buy. Then, use that data to serve targeted ads. Don't you mind the announcements? All right. But Facebook is not a stranger to data loss. Earlier this year, 533 million Facebook user records were exposed. Tap or click here for a tool you can use to check if Facebook has lost your info. 8. When you download a third-party scanning app, you are clogging your phone. However, many people gravitate towards these programs. So instead of throwing dice and giving up even more than your personal information, use the integrated resources of your phone. On Android, open the camera app, point it to a QR code and hold it still for a few seconds. If a notification is displayed, tap it. If you do not get a notification, go to Settings and enable the scan of the QR code. To scan a QR code on your iPhone, open the camera app and pass over the code. Your smartphone will automatically bring you to the code link. Did you know that QR codes are a simple way to share your Wi-Fi password without having to type? Tap or click here for the instructions to set it. 9. More than just dancing moves TikTok is famous for its fast viral videos - all from dances to dangerous stunts. But when children compete for the most viral clout, they will go to any length. A 10-year-old Italian girl strangled to death in a viral "black challenge", reported AP News. A 12-year-old Colorado boy died also participating in a "blackout challenge" in April. All parents know the dangers of TikTok. Your son might tell you that I'm on TikTok to go out with friends and dance, but every child is susceptible to equal pressure. If they see the stars of social media they admire to participated dangerous games, they may want to follow the mob's footsteps - often at the expense of their safety. If you have a baby at home, say hello to TikTok. Even if you use it on the phone, children can beto download it yourself. 10. Light it when smartphones are ocited for the first time, flashlight app were a must, no longer since this function is embedded in phones now. Many app designers have added new glossy features to keep users around and continue tracking all those data. take torch torch for iPhone, for example. the free app tracks your location, personal identifiers, usage data and diagnostic information. It's a lot to give up just to smell a flashlight. bottom line: ditch the flashlight apps on apple or android phones. you do not need them, and your native flashlight app is just as good. bonus tip: Do you have more photos than you know what to do? discover my podcast "Kim komando Explains" on apple, google podcasts, or your favorite podcast player. in an episode that is trending, I dive into the best ways to delete all files and duplicates - like memes and screenshots - by hiding the important images you want to store.
