BY WARREN AUGUSTINE LYON

Photo Courtesy: ulleo/Pixabay The more hyper your dog gets when you walk through the door, the more excitement he has about seeing you. For example, in some scenarios, dogs staring at humans and other dogs can be a form of intimidation. This is an effort to get clean. Photo Courtesy: Pixabay/Pexels This and similar situations are signs that he's waiting for your approval. Not entirely anyway. It may also indicate a lack of nutrients in your pet's food. Photo Courtesy: Mylene2401/Pixabay Leaving the underside of his body facing up is a sign of submissiveness and vulnerability. Sometimes this behavior can fade away with age. If you've found your dog munching on some bathroom droppings, at least know that you're not alone. It's a way for him to express companionship. However, if he's wagging it back and forth so aggressively that it's moving the rest of his body, then he's just happy to see you!Repetitive Sneezing or YawningIf your furry friend starts sneezing over and over, you might assume he's coming down with a bit of a cold. Is your dog just being strange? But what about when he brings you other random things, like garbage, a stick from the yard or (in some unfortunate and mildly disturbing cases) a dead bird or rodent? This is usually something that happens after you give him a lot of attention. You can liken this to your dog raising one of his paws. It's one of their methods of asking for attention. Tucking his paws underneath himself and curling in is a way of warming up, just as humans might do when they're feeling cold.Talking With Their TailsIt's not news that one way dogs communicate is by using their tails. Photo Courtesy: HermesRivera/Unsplash If your dog's tail is moving at a slower pace, he's communicating hesitation. Photo Courtesy: Lum3n/Pixabay It turns out that this mostly boils down to the apocrine glands we have in our bodies. Others are a bit more lenient. If the problem persists, you might want to consult your veterinarian. Unfortunately, this isn't necessarily the case. The goods news is that dogs have their own special ways of communicating with us. If your dog is following your every move, it's only because he enjoys being around you, and his natural instinct is to stay with his family. Or they might be suspicious. Plus, because they know their owners very well, they're able to read our body language. If dogs stare at you, or even glance at you, before they're about to do something, it means that they understand you're the Alpha and respect you.Rolling OverSome dog owners teach their dogs to roll over. In fact, he's trying to be the opposite. This means he's comfortable around you. Unnecessary yawning and sneezing can signify discomfort or possible stress. It's best to keep an eye on it to see if it persists.Dragging Their Bottoms Across the GroundHave you ever noticed your dog dragging his behind across the floor? However, when your dog does it, it doesn't necessarily mean that he has the same end goal. When dogs show their teeth and growl, especially when their ears are back, this is a sign of aggression. But what is it exactly? These highly concentrated glands are where dogs go to look for more information about who we are. Photo Courtesy: LesleyJuarez/Unsplash However, if a dog is comfortable with you, and you find him harmlessly and gently staring at you, it could just mean he's devoted to you and relaxed enough to make direct eye contact. Photo Courtesy: Fran_/Pixabay While this does communicate submissiveness, it could also mean they're asking for belly scratches. Photo Courtesy: Fezbot2000/Unsplash Sure, your mattress is probably a bit more comfortable than the couch or the dog bed. Photo Courtesy: RobertGrammer/Unsplash Believe it or not, these can actually be methods of communication. He was probably trying to tell you how anxious he gets when you're not around. But what does it mean? Photo Courtesy: RichardThijeratz/Unsplash However, your furry friend likely wasn't trying to be a rascal during the furniture-ransacking adventure. Consuming feces, whether it's his or another dog's, is one way that your dog tries to "clean" his environment or territory. But whether you were gone all day at work or were running a 10-minute errand, it doesn't matter to your dog: He still flips out the second you walk through the door as if he hasn't seen you in years. However, as any dog owner can attest, try as we might, communicating with our furry friends isn't always the easiest. Then you probably already know what he wants.Bringing Random "Presents"When your dog drops a toy at your feet, it's a clear indicator that he's ready to play, right? Dogs have high sense receptors, and the harder the wind passes, the more scents they're able to detect.Staring Directly at YouDog staring can be a tricky subject because it can mean many things based on specific circumstances and factors. So what gives? On the other hand, if he's sleeping and rolls onto his back, he's probably trying to cool down. If the dog has his ears back with his fur standing and a rigid tail, he's unhappy and in a protective mode.Waiting for the Go-AheadHave you ever come home to find your dog in his crate? This is a great thing. You know he's excited to see you, and the second you walk to the crate he'll get up and start wagging his tail furiously. Also, because stomach fur is thinner, when dogs sleep stomach-up, it might mean they're trying to cool down.Curling Up Like a FoxIf dogs that lie on their backs are confident and secure, is a canine that curls up like a fox to sleep insecure and anxious? But if that's true, dogs can be extremely clingy friends at times. It's merely a way of surveying his surroundings. Not necessarily. Photo Courtesy: AviRichards/Unsplash But sticking his head out the car window is rarely cause for concern. Why is this? Photo Courtesy: thehappiestface=)/Pexels Doing this isn't your dog's way of being gross — at least he's not trying to be. While you may chalk it up to coincidence, it's usually not. But it might go deeper than that. It gives them physical exercise while also giving them a task to focus on. If you allow your single dog to sleep with you, you may also notice that his preferred sleeping position is with his back against yours. Sure, that may be obvious. Your bed has your scent all over it, so when you're not home, your bed is the closest your dog can get to feeling like he's with you.Squinting Their EyesHuman beings squint their eyes for a number of reasons. Photo Courtesy: DominikaRoseclay/Pexels Not quite the same thing, actually. When dogs squint at us, they're not being judgmental or critical. To prevent this, try taking your dog on more walks or playing fetch to tire him out.Following You Around the HouseThey say dogs are man's best friend. And it makes sense that they sniff strangers and other dogs as a way of getting to know them. Maybe you let him, or maybe you didn't — some owners can get nervous about this, which is understandable. It could mean a few different things. Scent is the strongest sense for dogs, so even if they physically see you after you return, they may need to sniff you before their tails start wagging.Sleeping Back to BackIf you have more than one dog, you may have noticed them sleeping back to back. It's usually the opposite! Sleeping back to back is something a dog only does when he's with his "pack" and feels entirely comfortable with his surroundings.Freaking Out When You Walk Through the DoorIt's nice to know you're missed when you leave the house for an extended period. Photo Courtesy: AdamKontor/Pexels However, a dog that's just hanging around the house with his tongue out is communicating to you that he's feeling happy and relaxed. Photo Courtesy: DanielLincoln/Unsplash Sometimes it can be confusing because some dogs lightly use their teeth or let out growl-ish noises when they're playing. Rest assured that this is normal dog behavior and occasionally leads to vomiting. You may find them rolling onto their backs as you approach them. Photo Courtesy: SashaSashina/Unsplash Dogs have the ability to sense when something is wrong. But as time goes on you notice that this seems to be a habit. Photo Courtesy: Skeeze/Pixabay This can definitely be your dog trying to communicate that he thinks it's playtime. Photo Courtesy: MinAn/Pexels One reason is that they're trying to make contact with other dogs or announce their presence. It's his way of communicating appreciation for you and indicating how much he missed you when you were gone.Crashing on Your Bed While You're AwayNot all dog owners let their dogs sleep in or on their beds. Understanding them can even improve your relationship with your furry friend.Creating a Feather Bed From FurnitureIf you've ever come home and realized that your dog has taken it upon himself to rip up the couch cushions or other items like toilet paper rolls, you're certainly not alone. For example, if your dog suddenly develops a habit of licking his paws, it might mean something is bothering him. No, your beloved canine isn't switching to a plant-based diet. Photo Courtesy: LisaFotos/Pexels Your dog sleeping in a position that faces away from you isn't an insult or a sign that he doesn't want to cuddle. Either way, you might occasionally come home to find your dog lounging on your bed, even if he could have chosen the couch or his own dog bed. Photo Courtesy: TomekKlanczyński/Pixabay When a dog leans his body against yours, it usually means that he's trying to snuggle and cuddle with you. Photo Courtesy: MaggieLovesOrbit/Unsplash When dogs tilt their heads, it usually means that they're trying to hear something better. Even with plenty of sleep and no illness to speak of, these behaviors persist. Another reason is that they can hear a high-pitched noise, such as an ambulance siren. Unlike other forms of communication, this is one way dogs can express themselves verbally. However, even when dogs aren't trained for this command, many still do it. It's a sign that he's pleased with you and that he enjoys the current situation.Putting Their Ears Back and GrowingMost of us already know what this means. Different tail movements can mean different things. For example, if he knows it's getting close to dinner, he might be giving you a nudge with his eyeballs.Lounging With Their Legs in the AirWhen a dog falls asleep while lying on his back and has his paws and limbs sticking up, it's sometimes known as the "dead bug" position. Try spending some quality time with your pup or giving him some cuddles for a few minutes and see if the awkward eye behavior subsides.Eating FecesOkay, this isn't the most pleasant one. If your dog does this a lot, it's a good sign. Their howling could be indicative of their annoyance and their discomfort.Excessive LickingMost of us assume when a dog comes up to us and begins licking, it's their way of giving "kisses." Although this isn't entirely accurate, it is a form of communicating affection. At first, this can be alarming because you worry about what it might do to the cleanliness of your carpets. While it could mean he's a bit apprehensive, it's usually a way of keeping warm. But it becomes a lot cuter when you realize that it's essentially his way of hugging you because he isn't able to physically do that on his own.Sniffing You (or Strangers)As mentioned, dogs have a heightened sense of smell. Sometimes dogs do this because they're simply bored. Digging is also common among bored dogs. Photo Courtesy: MatthewHenry/Unsplash When your dog makes these eyes at you, it could be him communicating his love for you. Photo Courtesy: PaulMurphy/Unsplash However, when dogs scoot their butts across the floor, it could mean that their behinds are a bit dirty and, in turn, irritating. He doesn't want the area where he eats to be dirty.Hanging Their Tongues OutWhen you spend a lot of time running around with your dog, you might notice him starting to pant with his tongue hanging out. His distance may mean he's upset — so much so that he's unable or doesn't know how to help.Giving You the Sad, Puppy-Dog EyesPeople, particularly children, are known for giving "puppy dog eyes" when they're pleading for or seeking something. At first, he sits there, perhaps with his ears back, and patiently waits for you to approach. It's a form of establishing trust. Ditto for yawning. Again, this doesn't mean he's trying to get on your bad side. In all seriousness, one of the ways dogs communicate that they need (or, more likely, want) something is by lifting one paw. If it persists, though, it's best to try to exercise your dog before you leave the house.Howling Like a WolfWhen your dog breaks out into a howl, it's clear that he's trying to communicate something. Photo Courtesy: ChrisSlupski/Unsplash However, it's important to note that if you notice your dog excessively licking himself, it might be a sign of stress, anxiety or pain. However, most of us assume that when a dog's tail is wagging at all, it means he's happy and excited. If something piques their interest, tilting their heads is a way of turning their ears upward to hone in on what the noise is and where it's coming from. This can be fun and playful. While we may find humor in this fool's errand the dog is on, dogs (most often puppies) do this when they've yet to learn that their sought-after prize is attached to them. Obviously, this is a good thing. But what makes dogs choose the places they want to sniff? However, you'll likely feel a lot less annoyed next time this happens when you learn what it really means. But it's something a lot of dog owners deal with. They might be confused and trying to figure something out. This can be a clear indicator that he's saying he's thirsty or he might be simply out of breath. Although a dog following your every step can be annoying, it's also a behavior many homeowners find cute and endearing. It could be that he wants to play — unless you're in the middle of eating. Some dogs may be trying to hide their food or toys. It's a pet owner's worst nightmare but one of the most common things to happen. You can safely chalk it up to nervousness.Raising One of Their PawsRemember in school when you had to raise your hand if you wanted to ask the teacher something? It's one of the ways dogs show affection.Resting Their Bodies on PeopleA dog relaxing onto your leg or resting against you can sometimes be a bit irritating — especially if you're in the middle of trying to do something. While your special bond lets you understand each other to a certain degree, sometimes you wish you could just talk to one another. Photo Courtesy: LiliShepherd/Flickr However, that's not always the case. But it's important to read your situation to see what the dog is communicating. Photo Courtesy: ArsenyTogulev/Unsplash If you're sitting on the couch and your dog comes up and puts one paw on your leg, it probably means he wants something. In fact, some research suggests that canines evolved a facial muscle that lets them raise the spot between their eyebrows as a way of improving their communication with human beings.Sticking Their Heads Out Car WindowsIf you've ever taken your dog on a car ride, you've probably witnessed him trying to stick his head out the window. For example, if they hear a dog in the distance, they might begin howling. Photo Courtesy: SweetIceCreamPhotography/Unsplash Turns out this form of communication is pretty straightforward. This is most common when your dog feels comfortable around you and his environment, as lying on his back also puts him in a vulnerable position. Photo Courtesy: LindsayDavison/Unsplash If your dog doesn't typically curl up in a ball, you might think something is wrong. In some cases, it can also be slightly entertaining due to the sheer silliness of how it looks. Next time your pet is around someone new or in a different place, see if he lets out a few yawns or sneezes. Other times, it may look like they're being playful when really they're trying to get to an itch or something is irritating an anal gland.Grubbing on GrassYou're walking your dog or watching him play outside when you notice him snacking on some grass. So why do they do it? Basically, this is their way of communicating that they're curious about something.Chasing Their TailsSecond perhaps only to head tilting, tail chasing is one of the most adorable and entertaining things a dog can do. In some cases, it may mean that your dog is insecure or anxious.Comforting You When You're UpsetOne of the most heartwarming dog behaviors you can experience as a pet owner is when your dog seems to want to comfort you when something is wrong. Dogs that sleep like this communicate a laid-back, confident attitude that demonstrates how comfortable and secure they feel — around you and in their surroundings. Try giving him some water. But it might just mean he's feeling a tad chilly at the moment. He might also be asking you for something. At first, this may be something you take offense to. Dogs lick humans to show submissiveness, which is good. But if you're a new dog owner, or you encounter a dog and don't have one of your own, it serves as a helpful reminder. Photo Courtesy: KarstenPaulick/Pixabay It could also mean he's suffering from an upset stomach and attempting to improve his digestion. A tall, rigid tail means he's on edge, and a tucked tail usually means he's scared. However, sometimes bringing you a favorite toy or something he dug up from the yard can kind of be like the human version of gift-giving. So what does it mean when our dogs do it? MORE FROM LIFE123.COM Also, while the wind may feel nice on his face, it's not the speed the pup is enjoying but more likely the range of scents. A more severe reason may be that your dog is suffering from intestinal worms.Digging DeepYou buy your dog bundles of chewy and squeaky toys, yet when you go outside, you notice that he opts to dig a hole in your freshly landscaped lawn. If he doesn't, don't be offended. Photo Courtesy: ElvisClooth/Pixabay Few things in life are more universally loved than dogs. Photo Courtesy: LarsForseth/Pixabay A possible reason for the digging is that it's been bred into his specific breed type. They also might start squinting when they're tired. Unfortunately, it could also mean a more serious problem, such as worms or an issue with their anal glands.Tilting Their HeadsYou'd be hard-pressed to come across someone who doesn't find a dog's head tilts adorable. If you're feeling sad, your dog really might come to comfort you. But dogs aren't trying to win any cuteness points when they do this (even if that is a byproduct).
